

The City of Coolidge, incorporated in 1945, was named in honor of Calvin Coolidge, the 30th President acknowledging the impact of the Coolidge Dam.

Coolidge is in the center of a diverse farming area. Some of the crops grown are fresh vegetables, hay, grain crops, dairy and cotton.

Coolidge is home of the Casa Grande Ruins National Monument. The monument was the very first historic site protected and preserved by the United States Government on June 22, 1892. It was built about 1200 A.D. by the Hohokam people. See how the Hohokam lived hundreds of years ago. They were the first to develop irrigation in the Southwest.
